

Shrouded Women

Sandra Torrijos

My personal history and our collective history as women have resulted in a silencing that is at once a nightmarish experience of claustrophobia and one of subconscious paralysis. The journey of change primarily lies in our capacity to recognize this condition -- not alone but with other women from whom we can find the empowerment to finally break the silence. The necessity of this process of unsheathing is both immediate and inevitable.

